

THE SHADOW

9th Edition - Spring 2003

CONCORDIA'S FINEST NEWS SOURCE

Used Car Salesmen, Telemarketers, Televangelists to Occupy Area Outside Cafeteria

Mequon. Used car salesmen, telemarketers and televangelists are joining students at tables outside the cafeteria in their own attempts to reach the college-student market. Concordia director of Student Stuff, John Hurtzer, says it only makes sense to allow such third-parties to join in the harassment of students on their way in and out of the cafeteria: "Outside the cafeteria is the best place to reach the maximum audience while promoting your own agenda," Hurtzer said. "Student groups have been very successful in raising awareness about various social activities and to sell things like T-shirts and so on to the masses flowing in and out of the dining hall. Hopefully, these other groups of individuals - used car salesmen, telemarketers and televangelists - will share in the success."

Students, however, do not share in Hurtzer's optimism. "I was walking out of the cafeteria when suddenly this weird guy wearing a cowboy hat got in my face and started telling me that 'Believe it or not', he had a car I could afford. It was terrible." complained sophomore Judy Wessh.

Other students voiced similar complaints, but former televangelist Gerald Gapnik says he has had great success in obtaining donations for his new church-related project. "Brother," Gapnik told us, "as streams of water flow from the mighty rivers into the seas, it is in that very way that Concordia students flow from the cafeteria and into my 'Sermon Zone' where I subject them to a heartfelt plea for money. If things keep going as they have, soon I will have my new Corvette....er, church gym."

Continued, Page ABCD3.

Your Horoscope: Back By Popular Demand!!!

Gilliam Flann,
Horoscopologist

Aries.

Although you want to stop biting your nails, the stars advise against doing so as nose picking can be painful with nails.

Taurus.

After the giant mutant spider bites you, you will become incredibly powerful, but only for the few moments leading up to your death at the hands of the insidious giant mud wasp which lays eggs in the paralyzed bodies of giant spiders.

Gemini.

Although you yourself are a stock broker, here's some advice regarding your financial future. After a sluggish bear market and high unemployment rates it's finally time for you to invest. You'll probably want to stock up on canned goods and get yourself a decent shotgun for when the mob of your ruined clients storm your house.

Cancer.

Now that the genie has granted all three of your wishes, it might be a good idea to have somebody do him in before an evil sorcerer / vizier / talking parrot gets a hold of him.

Leo.

Someone once told you that you could make $1,000 to $8,000 working from your home licking envelopes. Well guess what? Someone lied.

Virgo.

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for you to dissolve from your membership in the Tupperware Club—do it!

See HOROSCOPES, Page 2

Some of the new faces you may see outside the cafeteria. (From left to right): Televangelist Gerald Gapnik, a fast-talking telemarketer and Papa Tex of Papa Tex's Used Cars.

Coins for Books Campaign Begins

Mequon. The Spring Semester "Coins For Books" campaign will soon begin at Concordia at a booth adjacent to the Book Store. How it works: students will reluctantly bring their old textbooks to ceive a number of coins in exchange for their once valuable books.

"It's amazing how quickly these books lose their value," commented sophomore Lea Dinger after trading in some of her old books to a chop-licking Book Bandit, "My genetics textbook, which I bought only several months ago for $170, was sold for $1.70, the entire sum paid in coins of course."

See COINS, Page 2

the "Book Bandit Booth" where they will re-

Campus Clean-Up II A Bigger Hit Than The Original

Mequon. Following the mixed success of the original Campus Clean-Up Day, Campus Clean-Up II was a smash hit. While the first Campus Clean-Up focused on picking up the litter outside the campus the sequel had a different focus.

Campus Cleanliness Coordinator Tyrone Brandt had this to say about Campus Clean Up II, "The first campus clean up was done by students and achieved only a mixed level of success. For Campus Clean-Up II, we knew we needed pros to do the clean up job, so I called on some old friends of mine. They're getting a little up there in age, but with so much experience under their belts, I knew they'd do a good job for us."

Brandt was speaking of some of his old "business connections" (shown to the right). These gentlemen became the stars of Campus Clean Up II, scaring hundreds of would-be litterbugs into reform.

Freshman Ruben Walsher says he was about to toss an empty soda can over his shoulder when he was approached by one of these 'cleaners'. "He was a big guy in a black suit," reported Walsher, "He looked at me and said, 'Ey! You! Yeah, you! You about to do what I think you about to do?' Then he grabbed the soda, shoved me up against the wall and stuck his face into mine. 'Ow 'bout you start showing this school a yours a little respect eh? S'all about respect. Capeesh?' Scared me to death."

Numerous other students gave similar accounts of Campus Clean Up II, but at the end of the day, despite the fact that many students were hiding in their rooms, the campus was substantially cleaner.

LEFT: "You want me to clean up Concordia eh? Ok, I'll clean up Concordia!" RIGHT: A "Cleaner".

Some Dudes Who Gave The School Lots Of Money to Be Granted Eternal Place in Concordia's Hallways

Concordia. Some dudes who gave Concordia lots of dough will forever be remembered at the school via the magic of commemorative portraits and busts that will be placed throughout the school to remain for all of time.

"It's kind of cool," said dude Randy Varichak whose likeness will hang throughout all remaining human history in one of Concordia's many hallways. "By donating to Concordia I have, in a sense, given myself immortality. Long after my bones have oxidized and my children's children are dying in nursing homes some students at Concordia will be able to see my smiling face looking down at them and read a little inscription informing them that I donated lots of money to their school ages ago."

Dude Shawn Piper says he donated money for the sole purpose of getting his picture hung on the wall somewhere in the school. "My life thus far has been pretty lame," said Piper, "I want to be remembered as a good, kind man, not the real jerk that I've actually been. I figured by giving some money to Concordia, they could put up a plaque and portrait of me, and presto, I'll be remembered as a kind loving philanthropist forever and ever. It's my own little way of rewriting my own history. Isn't that neat?"

Although many dudes gave money, Concordia selected only six to receive an eternal place in Concordia's hallways. One dude, Jeffrey Merkel, actually only gave the school two pennies. Since that was all he had, Concordia will create a bust of his head that will rest eternally outside the Department of Donations to remind people of his giving spirit, long after his real spirit has passed to the other side of life.

Dude Randy Varichak (left) smiles, knowing he will never be forgotten. Dude Jeffrey Merkel (right) poses for the creation of a bust that will remain at CUW even while he is rotting in the earth.

HOROSCOPES, continued from page 1

Libra.

You will come to the realization that you rushed into marriage a little too quickly when you overhear your spouse saying: "our mighty progeny will fulfill the great oracle's words".

Scorpio.

Your life will suddenly grow much more complicated than it has ever been before. However, this can be avoided if you just ignore the rubrics cube that will soon cross your path.

Sagittarius.

Sometimes audience is everything. When you casually mentioned that you were considering opening a "small" business, you had no idea that the midget militia would be offended enough to put you on their most wanted list.

Capricorn.

That one Beavis and Butthead poster, once your pride and joy, will now bring you misery and regret when your new girlfriend dumps you upon seeing it.

Aquarius.

Although your stint as a laboratory assistant was brief and uneventful it's looking more and more like you will be stuck with the nickname "Igor" for the rest of your life.

Pisces.

The NBA playoffs are in full swing and you could care less. However, soon you will care when an enraged and bitter L.A. Clippers fan holds you personally responsible for the team's atrocious 27-55 season.

COINS, continued from page 1

Other students voiced similar complaints. "I had no choice but to sell out to the book bandits," grumbled student Jeffrey Scharpe, "My economics book was a 200th edition. Next year they will be using the 201st edition. I guess economics has changed drastically in the past five months. With the economy being down and all, the publishers decided to create more work by publishing another edition. I just wish the Book Bandits would have given me more money so I could do my part to stimulate the economy."

Shadow reporter Hugh Carter tried to interview the so called "Book Bandits" but received only repeated buffets to the head. He was then kidnapped and dragged before the cruel "Book Bandit" leader, Binder. Binder then performed an act of maddening savagery by relieving Carter of the only book in his possession, a Gideon's Mini-Bible.